The Tuskegee Airmen

In 1941, Tuskegee, Alabama was selected as the site of an important new development in military training. For the first time, Black Americans were allowed to serve their country as members of the United States Army Air Corps. During its five year history, Tuskegee Army Air Field was home to almost one thousand African-American pilots and more than 10,000 Black support personnel. Despite the harsh restrictions of segregation and isolation, African-Americans trained and served together thus developing unbreakable bonds. Together, they filled the ranks of the 99th Fighter Squadron, the 332nd Fighter Group, and the 477th Bombardment Group. Their remarkable achievements at home and overseas destroyed stereotypes and helped bring about the eventual integration of the United States military. Among their many achievements during WWII, they were noted for not losing any bombers to enemy fighters as they provided bomber escort missions over strategic targets in Europe.
